

Situation: toxic relationship in a family dinner with some outdated thoughts inside our family

National team: Spain

Participants: the whole national team that went to the project in Bulgaria

Assistants: friends or family members from some of the Spanish participants.

Roles:

Son: Javi and Noah

Grandparents: Antonio and Laura

Mother: Marilia

Father: Pablo

We are all sitting in the family room, celebrating Javi's 14th birthday. When we are all finished, an argument starts concerning the cleaning after dinner.

Father: who's turn is it to clean the dishes? (referring to Marilia)

Mother: I have made everything for Javi's party. You should do something and help me with this.

Granmother: Marilia, the women are always the ones that have to do this, it's your duty and no more. Or didn't you see that I have always cleaned all in this house?

Son: That is a lie, I have always been told that housework has to be shared.

Father: Who the f told you that boy?

Mother: Javi is right, Pablo!

Son: I was told that at school.

Grandfather: okey, calm down Laura, I agree that they have to split the work as we used to do in our home with all the housing things that have to work on, so it is also good when they can split the cleaning things in the kitchen, I think that gives equality to keep a good relationship and this doesn't seem to be like that, and even more when the kid is saying something positive he learned at school, come on!

Son: love you grandad!
